

RETIREE CONNECTION

Greetings from your Servant Solutions family!

One of the meaningful features we're grateful to see each day in our new office space is our core values wall. But these values are much more than artwork on display. They truly shape the way we serve, plan, communicate, and care for the people entrusted to us. Investing wisely in others through our time, presence, encouragement, generosity, and legacy truly matters.

*That theme is reflected beautifully in this issue's featured excerpt from Rolland Daniels' book, Legacy Maker: Live a Life That Matters. Rolland is a longtime member of Servant Solutions, and his wife, Ellen, has faithfully served as our Director of Engagement since 2016. His words encourage us to reflect on what it means to invest well in the people around us.*

As always, we are honored to serve you in this season of life. If you have questions about your account or need anything at all, please don't hesitate to reach out.

HAVING EVERYTHING DOESN'T GUARANTEE ANYTHING

I have never seen this more clearly exemplified than on the unfortunate occasion when, as a minister, I had two memorial services in one day.

One funeral was for one of the richest men in our city, who was said to own so much land across the United States that he could not remember all the particular parcels of land at his disposal. Yet his memorial service was one of the saddest occasions I can remember. His family sat on both sides of the chapel and none of the parties involved were on speaking terms with one another. With his passing, the business of wills and inheritance dominated their relationships.

The mood in the chapel that day was not one of grief, but of calculation and manipulation. I saw no effort to console one another or embrace each other's pain. Few of this man's friends were in attendance. He was well known to use people and then discard them without another thought. The service was a stark reminder of a man whose life was but a shell of what it could have been.

As I drove to the second service, I wondered what awaited me.

The second memorial service was for a local farmer who owned very little. To supplement his farming income, he also drove a school bus for over thirty years. I walked into the sanctuary and watched his family sitting together. The dynamics were completely different than those of the first memorial service. The farmer's family and friends shared their grief by embracing and consoling one another. There were laughter and tears as they shared common stories from their past.

I was astonished to see how many non-family members attended. Many former students who had ridden this farmer's bus came to pay their respects. One by one, people greeted the family and shared stories of how he had helped them in times of need without anyone else knowing. His life had been built upon caring and generosity.

I marveled that day at the stark differences between the two funeral services. The first reflected a man who had everything and yet, in a deeper sense, had nothing. The second reflected a gentleman who had very few material things, yet had everything of genuine value because of how he invested his life.

Please understand, I am not saying that money is a bad thing or that those who have wealth are bad people. Some of the most generous and gracious people I have ever known were wealthy, but they knew there are some things money can't buy. So they invested in what truly satisfies and endures.

Each of us has a choice about what we invest our lives in. It has nothing to do with our take-home pay or position of achievement. It has everything to do with understanding and heeding the truth that "having everything doesn't guarantee anything." My hope is that we will not wait for tragedy to bring us to our senses. It is important that we reassess what has given value to our lives and to whom have we given value. We can begin by asking, how have we invested our presence and attention?
